A thank-you to medical workers

By Josefina Marchetti

My dad passed away three weeks ago.

He stopped breathing and we called 911 right away.

The paramedics arrived there before I did, and I live five minutes away.

The paramedics worked on him, they got a pulse and took him to Surrey Memorial Hospital. These guys worked so hard they were sweating, but never stopped updating us on my dad's condition or what was going to happen next.

When we arrived at the hospital my dad was already being seen by a doctor and a very sweet girl, who happened to be the social worker on duty, came to us and in the sweetest way possible explained the situation.

My dad's condition was very serious. She stayed with us until the doctor came and explained with more details what was going on and what to expect.

My dad passed away that night, or Monday morning I should say, but we knew everybody did everything in order to help him.

This letter is a thank-you to the social worker on duty, the doctor that saw my dad in emergency and all the paramedics that did their best to save my dad's life.

Too bad I didn't get their names; I would like to send a thank-you note to each one of them.
